

Tomorrow is Election Day. Many of us have already cast our ballots. I hope that all of us have looked seriously at what we are voting for. This year, the election is not about politics in the same way it usually is. It is now a choice between voting for an aging, racist, incapable person unleashing venom against his fellow citizens, against immigrants, against the idea of democratic governance while simultaneously praising dictators and strongmen or voting for a reasonable, intelligent, rational sixty year old woman. That she understands how government works is a bonus; the most important reason to vote for Kamala Harris is that she is the only sane person on the Presidential ballot.
